NCI Building Systems Acquires Intellectual Property Rights of STEELOX Systems, LLC

NCI Building Systems, Inc., has announced that it has purchased the intellectual property rights to STEELOX Systems, LLC, a metal building and components manufacturer headquartered in Mason, Ohio, with a storied history stretching back more than 70 years. Through the purchase, NCI acquired the rights to any and all of STEELOX's proprietary rights, including trademarks, copyrights, patents, common law rights, names, logos, web sites and customers lists.

A.R. Ginn, Chairman and CEO of NCI, remarked, "We are proud to add the STEELOX name to our growing portfolio of high-quality brands. Through its subsidiaries, such as STEELOX Building Systems and STEELOX Roofing, the STEELOX organization was a tough competitor, which built a very loyal following among its network of established builders and roofing contractors."

NCI is evaluating the STEELOX product offerings and the technology available such as online services, estimating and pricing tools. With an aggressive strategy, a customer-centric approach and sophisticated testing abilities, NCI plans to reintroduce many of the proven STEELOX products back into the marketplace. Also, NCI intends to supply STEELOX customers with the high-quality products and outstanding customer service they deserve.

"We believe we are ideally positioned to provide manufacturing capabilities, a national distribution network, financial strength and industry leadership to reinvigorate the STEELOX brand," Ginn added.
